Pyrolator (Kurt Dahlke) is back, after a hiatus of 24 years! And he delivers pure electronic club music gold. The album will go on sale in October, preceded by a second taster in the form of a beautiful blue 12 inch vinyl, on August 19th. If the name Pyrolator is new to you, take a look at the short biography below. Pyrolator explains everything else in this interview:

Why did you wait for 24 years before releasing a new album?

I have been a solo performer for a long while already, but the pieces I play are not entirely suited to the medium of LP or CD. They are either created as multi-channel sound or are heavily dependent on visuals. Nevertheless, I have always had a secret love of more club orientated music. Since the mid-nineties I have often produced or remixed projects like Antonelli Electr., Repeat Orchestra, Kreidler or Rocket In Dub. I had a lot of fun in the process, so I began to introduce elements like these into my live repertoire. They always went down really well, which gave me the idea of releasing something along those lines.

Is the title "Neuland" programmatic? Are you breaking new ground?

First and foremost, it continues the "land" series of my solo albums ("Inland", "Ausland", "Wunderland", "Traumland"). "Neuland" was always pencilled in as the title for my fifth solo album.

How did you construct the album exactly?

Basically in the same way as all of the other Pyrolator albums. I only played a really small portion of the music on the keyboard. I first used "Brontologik", a kind of flexible sequencer, on "Ausland". In those days, it still counted as hardware. Today, it's software, something I have developed continuously over the years. I am currently using the "Monome" as an input device. I programme a kind of matrix of rhythms, chords and melodies. I like to work with loops, refining them bit by bit, piecing them together. Music created through programming – composition, one might say – is simply nothing like the music I would come up with on a keyboard.

Tell us how your live performance looks

For me, it is important that I have the flexibility to intervene in the music, hence I work with two special controllers. The "Lightning II", on the one hand, enables me to translate the various musical parameters by means of two rods and movements in the air. This allows me to control everything I need in the computer – pitch, filters, length of the pieces etc. The other controller, the "Manta", reacts sensitively to any contact and thus gives rise to the most delicate of melodies, as well as facilitating other control functions.
